FLYING LIKE A BIRD IN THE SKY

By ALICE TATE
Monday Magazine Writer

The wind whipped at the hang glider's blue and yellow wings making them flutter in the breeze like laundry on a clothes line. The young pilot stood halfway up the ridge of the mountain, struggling to keep the wings of the glider level.

From the bottom of the hill the instructor yelled directions, "Nose up, nose down, steady... okay go!" The pilot began running down the slope of the hill and raised the nose of the glider until the wind filled the wings lifting both man and glider off the ground.

The novice pilot soared for almost 200 feet, his legs dangling in the air, until with a dip of his nose the glider swooped down, hit the ground and landed the pilot roughly on his stomach and knees.

Randy Naylor got up, short of breath but with a big smile, and said, "I loved it... for about three or four seconds!"

Randy said his first experience at hang gliding was "just like you would imagine. It feels like the hill disappears but you don't — and then you're just treading air."

Randy's instructor, Bob Porter, has been hang gliding for seven years. Recently he moved to Utah from New Mexico, where he was president of the state's hang gliding association.

Hang lifts

Randy and Porter walked up and down the south slope of Point of the Mountain as Randy took several runs at learning to fly. As Randy carried the glider up the hill for the fifth time he said, "They have ski lifts, now we need hang gliding lifts."

"Yeah, then we could pay $10 a day to go flying," Porter replied.

Once again harnessed to the glider, Randy stood on the slope and tried to steady the wings of the glider. But the wind caught him unprepared, and as he took off running, he was lifted into the air and soared most of the way down the hill before landing on his feet.

"The takeoff is the most difficult to learn," Porter says. "Once you can handle a clean takeoff, you'll get up sooner and go farther."

"When you get up it's a matter of control. You shove your body the way you want to go. You have to be sensitive to the wind," he advises.

"Like a bird"

"Hang gliding is the closest thing to flying like a bird," comments Mike McCandless, from Salt Lake City. "The glider feels like part of you and you use your body weight and muscle movements to fly. You're doing it, not just using controls or a steering wheel," he says.

Most of the pilots who converge at Point of the Mountain belong to the Utah Hang Gliding Association.

reality of resurrection

By CLARKE BROWN
Monday Magazine Writer

The family, with its sympathies, affections, and love for each other, will endure beyond the grave and exist forever because of the resurrection of the Savior.

Speaking at the 12-stake fireside Sunday night, President Ezra Taft Benson, of the Council of the Twelve Apostles, also spoke on the reality of the resurrection and said church members have a responsibility toward their ancestors.

"The greatest events of history are those which affect the greatest number for the longest periods, and by that standard, no event could be more important to individuals or nations than the resurrection of the Master."

Elder Benson added that the "eventual resurrection of every soul who has lived and died on earth is a spiritual certainty, and surely there is no event for which one should make more careful preparation."

A glorious resurrection should be the goal of every man and woman, for it is a reality. Nothing is more absolutely universal than the resurrection. Every living being will be resurrected.

Golf team wins Western tourney

The BYU golf team finished its two-tournament road trip in California by winning the 32nd annual Western Intercollegiate golf championship.

Paced by freshman Bobby Clappett, who tied for third with a three round score of 213, and Eric Gott, who finished fifth, just one stroke behind Clappett, the Cougars turned in an impressive three-day total of 870, just eight strokes of the record set by BYU a few years back.

Coach Karl Tucker said he was pleased with the team as a whole but was especially impressed with the play of No. 5 man Eric Gott, who he said has become "our solid fifth place player."

A fine opening round performance shot BYU to a narrow one stroke edge after the first day, but in the second round Clappett provided the impetus with a three-under-par 68 to push the defending WAC champions to a bulging eight shot edge over challenging San Diego State.

For BYU, rated third in the nation by "Golf World" magazine, it was the fifth win at the Western in ten years. "What many people do not realize is that the competition is getting a lot tougher. When we won it a few years ago we won by 44 strokes, this week we won by two," said Tucker.

Also helping the Cougar cause was senior Mike Brannan. Brannan double bogeyed 14 and 18 and still managed to come in at one-over-par 72 to bolster the team. Jamie Edman also carded a par round of 71.

The Cougars will remain home to practice for the next few weeks before going to Houston to compete in the All-American Tournament, where the field will include No. 1-ranked Oklahoma State. Brannan will leave Thursday for Augusta, Ga., to begin practicing for the Masters.

John Bottorff, 2-0, and short stop Vance Law were also named to the all-tournament team.

Cougar pitcher Tyler Steinbock was credited with Saturday's win, after relieving for Tom Morris in the third inning. San Jose went through four pitchers in an effort to rein in BYU's formidable hitting.

Among the Cougar's 16 hits was Don Valgardson's seventh homerun of the year, hit with one man on base in the sixth inning. Marc Thomas and Rick Scrivner hit doubles for the Cougars.

BYU's season record is now 13-8.

sweep at home

BYU's women's tennis team swept a pair of matches at home against two Colorado schools in northern sectional over the weekend.

On Friday, the Cougar ladies shut out the University of Northern Colorado 9-0, then beat the netters from the University of Colorado by the same score Saturday.

On Friday, No. 1 seed Karen Kennington brushed away her opponent 6-1, 6-1 and the rest of the Cougar women were equally successful against their opponents Friday. Second seeded Tracy Tanner easily defeated her UNC opponent 6-0, 6-2 while Barbara Barnes won her matches 6-1, 6-2.

Denise Nardi and Sindt Pardoe both won matches 6-1, 6-1 and Lori Barlow won 6-0, 6-1.

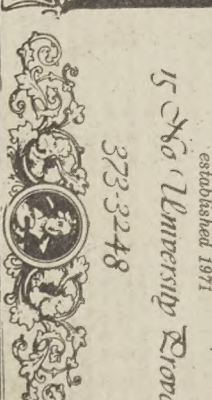

In doubles play, Kennington and Barnes won 6-1, 6-3. Nardi and Tanner were victorious 6-2, 6-0, and Pardoe and Barlow won 6-4, 6-2.

On Saturday, BYU found Colorado a tougher team than their northern counterparts,

Tracksters win meet

BYU's track and field team swept 11 of 18 events in tallying 116 points to capture the BYU Invitational Saturday.

Although Coach Clarence Robison said individual competitors from the Intermountain schools participating in the meet didn't allow the Cougars easy victories, although the schools were no real threat as teams.

The Cougar's high point man for the Invitational was Keneth Gardenkrans, an All-American in the discus, who garnered two first places by hurling the discus 190-2 and 1/2 and the shot put 56-10 and 1/2.

Gardenkrans also scored second place points as he followed Tapio Kuusela 1-2 in the hammer throw. Kuusela heaved the hammer to a new BYU school record of 204-1, bettering his own personal best of 202-8 established last year as the former BYU mark.

Robison said he was pleased with the performance of three BYU high jumpers, who swept the event, by clearing the bar at 7-0.

Sophomore Kim Nielsen, currently ranked second in the NCAA with an indoor mark of 7-4, won the event with a leap of 7-2.

Second place honors were shared by freshmen Robert Olson and Dave Stapleton with identical 7-0 leaps.

Son, Jesus Christ, to the boy prophet is the greatest event that has occurred in this world since the resurrection of the Master.

According to Joseph Smith, those who have died in Jesus may expect to enter into all that fruition of joy when they come forth, which they possessed or anticipated here.

He added that the young people of the LDS Church will "qualify for these blessings as (they) go with a companion to the House of the Lord and receive the sealing ordinances which bind the family unit beyond the grave."

Exaltation is family affair, Elder Benson said. He asked church members if they can have done all they can as a family to be saviors to their progenitors. "Without them," he said, "we cannot be made perfect."

"Crossed Swords."
Produced by Pierre Spengler, directed by Richard Fleischer. Starring Oliver Reed, Mark Lester, George C. Scott and Ernest Borgnine. Final screenplay by George MacDonald Fraser. A Warner Brothers film presented by Alexander Salkind. Rated PG, now playing at the Fox Theatre.

In the late 1800s, Mark Twain wrote "The Prince and the Pauper." It was a tale that, as Twain put it, "may have happened" or "it may not have happened; but it could have happened." It was a tale that dealt with "the quality of mercy."

specifically, the mercy a young monarch learned as he spent time among the peasants of his country. It was also a tale that became a classic, loved by each new generation.

Alexander and Ilya Salkind (who produced the recent production, "The Musketeers") have turned the Twain novel into a spectacular motion picture, "Crossed Swords." Any film that boasts nine past academy award winners, plus a multimillion dollar budget, should be, at very least, highly entertaining. "Crossed Swords" is this, and more.

Pictorially, it is magnificent. Meticulous reproductions of the Westminster Palace and Abbey, verdant countryside, smoky caverns, and crowded streets all filmed in various locations throughout Europe, are skillfully captured by the camera artistry of Jack Cardiff ("Black Narcissus"). Musically, it is delightful. Maurice Jarre has composed a score for this big screen spectacle in the tradition of his "Lawrence of Arabia" and "Dr. Zhivago." The music during the first few moments of the film creates an air of anticipation which is never lost.

The screenplay is an interesting treatment of Twain's story. The plot is easily recognized — Tom Canty, pauper, meets the Prince of Wales, Edward (son of Henry VIII), and they exchange identities.

FLICK FLACK

But there are differences between the film and the novel. The screenwriters chose to concentrate on action rather than on moral commentary. Edward's awakening to the plight of his subjects, and Tom's flirtation with Oliver Reed played the part of Miles Hendon, the man who saves the disguised Edward from an angry mob and eventually leads the prince back to London for the coronation. Hendon must be dignified and harsh, a lover and a fighter, a skeptic and believer, all in one. Reed handles each nuance of this complex individual with equal skill.

Poor acting

One of the few exceptions to an otherwise strong cast is Raquel Welch. As in most of her roles, she has more difficulty remaining within the limits of her costumes than the limits of her part. Miss Welch is never a disappointment, however, because one never expects much from her. Fortunately, in this production, she has several moments of silence before her first line.

Lester ("Oliver") played the dual role of Edward and Tom. However, his physical and emotional limitations created inconsistencies which were disappointing. He was too skinny not to be laughed at, and he never reacted appropriately to the impact of his situation as an ousted Prince of Wales.

In all fairness, however, there were some strong points to his performance. Some of his scenes with Miles were touching, and during a bout in the Ruffler's camp he captured a good measure of princely dignity.

The question to consider in Lester's case now, is whether or not films hold and future for him. He has arrived at the transitional stage between child's parts and adult roles. Many studios are reluctant to give such performers a chance despite past successes.

What ever flaws may be apparent in "Crossed Swords," its strengths outweigh its weaknesses. Some may complain that the film lacks depth and significance. Some may be offended that the screenplay alters the original story. Some may bemoan another big-budget spectacle with never permitted to develop well-rounded characters.

Although these criticisms have a primary intent of truth, the film is entertainment. That is the business to which the Salkinds have dedicated themselves, as evidenced by their other box office success. And "Crossed Swords" will be added to that list as a film to be enjoyed by people who want a "policing good time."
